I think this is an excellent report. The concept of developing a separate Human Resources Management System for the Agency, setting us apart from the rest of the federal government, has much appeal.

Most of the points outlined in the report have considerable merit, although I see varying degrees of difficulty arising in implementing the recommendations. It is certainly possible, even easy, to quibble with individual recommendations, but I wholeheartedly agree that, in order to work, such a program must be an integrated system. Section V on page 9 on the Total Program is the key section. The piece-meal hodge-podge of programs we've seen lately has made some needed improvements, but as an approach it is not working like an integrated program has the potential of doing.
